

Connected TV advertising brings the benefits of programmatic to TV advertising to reach highly-engaged audiences and create a big-screen experience. From near-instant reporting on campaigns to placing ads on streaming services like Hulu and targeting millennials who make up the majority of cord-cutter households, Connected TV advertising gives marketers an efficient channel for reaching TV viewers.

What's Connected TV Advertising?

Connected TV (CTV) is any television that's connected to the internet. Connected TV advertising is the placement of ads on connected TV devices like Roku, SlingTV, and DIRECTV OnDemand.

How Connected TV Works

Choozle sources CTV ad placements through private marketplaces. Choozle has a pre-negotiated library with details on placement, dimensions, price dimensions, price floors, and geographic availability of the placements available for purchase. Unlike traditional TV advertising, connected TV advertising enables data-driven targeting of customers and their households in real-time that can be used to extend the reach of your traditional TV campaigns or digital advertising campaigns.

Targeting Options with Connected TV Household Targeting

Use geolocation, first-party data, and third-party data to target your most valuable viewers and households.

Extend Your Reach

Enable cross-device targeting to retarget households that have seen your ad across all their devices.

Optimize with Expanded Metrics

View your performance alongside all your other digital campaigns with the same metrics, impressions, geolocation, CPM, win rate, as well as connected TV specific metrics like cross-device attribution and video completion rates.

Types of Connected TVs

Internet-connected TV, through consoles, sticks, or smart TVs, delivers streaming content on any device alongside premium, professionally produced content similar to watching a traditional TV commercial.

Notes & Best Practices

- Private marketplace auctions are by invite-only and require participants to meet a minimum floor CPM. We recommend setting your base bid a minimum of $0.10 CPM above the price floor to ensure that you can participate in the auction for this inventory.
- Separate your data targeting and contextual category targeting into separate ad groups to extend your potential reach and maximize for optimization.
- Connected TV is best used for awareness campaigns with a reach goal as most streaming devices do not allow for users to click-through.
- When evaluating the performance of your campaign, the number of impressions corresponds to the households or devices served, rather than the users served, with each household containing multiple users.